Valeria was an important Roman city founded on the land conquered to the Celtiberians, between 93 and 82 BC by Valerius Flaccus. Its impressive ruins are located on a spectacular site near the modern town of Valeria (Cuenca, Castilla-La Mancha). It is located on a tongue of land between limestone gorges at an altitude of 1000 metres above sea level.

The major urban development dates to the 1st century AD, when the construction of the forum was undertaken. It is one of the most complete Roman forums in the centre of Spain.

The Basilica is located to the north side of the forum while on the west side are the Exedra (Hall of the imperial cult) and the Cryptoporticus; a vaulted underground gallery functioning as a street or storerooms that served as the foundation to the floor of the Exedra. To the south lies a monumental staircase that gives access to the forum, a series of shops and the most iconic building of Valeria; the Nymphaeum, over 100 metres long. The ensemble is bounded by streets. The extent and status of the remains indicate that it was a Municipium.

From 1951 to 1974, the archaeological excavations started and the people of the modern small village became actively involved. Thanks to the amazing work of the teacher and antiquity lover Francisco Suay. With his initiative, a local Museum was also created in 1952, and it would be the germ of the Archaeological Museum of Cuenca. From 1974 to 1978, the excavation of Valeria was greatly promoted under the direction of Manuel Osuna, after the departure of Suay. From 1979 the new director was Ángel Fuentes. During this period, the works continued in the Forum: the Basilica, the Curia, the tabernae of
